

GERMANY

INTERIOR MINISTER KANTHER'S "SECURITY PACKAGE 94": MORE POWERS FOR POLICE AND SECRET SERVICES

The Combat against crime will be the key issue of chancellor Helmut Kohl's governing Christian-Democratic party, the CDU, in the super-campaign for the election of the Federal Parliament (Bundestag) and the Federal President (Bundespräsident) in 1994.

In what appears to be an early starting shot of the CDU's campaign, the new Interior Minister, Manfred Kanther, has presented his "Security package 94". A massive extension of police and security service powers including legalised eavesdropping inside private apartments, speedier and harder punishment, more restrictions against aliens: these are some of the focal points of the minister's programme which, he says, should "restore citizens' confidence in the state ruled by law".

The Minister's drastic measures are likely to find a willing ear among German voters increasingly insecured by an evermore ruff economic and social climate. Those warning of the devastating effect of "security state" policies on civil liberties are facing hard times. Ironically, the recent massive increase of racist violence is used as a welcome pretext for further dismantling constitutional rights.

Measures against common crime

Noting the "particular concern" rising youth criminality is raising among "many citizens", the Interior Minister pathetically calls for strengthening the "educational vigour of family and school". Young people, Mr. Kanther explains, need "orientation", "moral values", "professional opportunities", and "meaningful recreational activities", enabling them to "find their way in a complicate and changing world". The minister, however becomes more specific, when listing up the repressive measures apparently conceived to deal with the rapidly growing number of people, both young and old, out of reach of all the above. Some of the measures proposed are:

- Improved and visible police presence by increased street patrols of officers in uniform;
- Unburdening the police of non-police tasks;
- Intensified cooperation between police and private security enterprises. Training of the latter must be improved and regulated.
- Recruiting of aliens by the police for "particular tasks";
- A trial period with more systematic use of "voluntary police reserve forces" under
